In this study, the continuum damage mechanics model for predicting the stiffness reduction of composite laminates including transverse cracks is formulated as a function of crack density. To formulate the model, first the damage variable in the direction normal to the fiber of a ply including transverse cracks is derived.

2.1 Model description. The continuum mechanics modeled by JAS3D are based on two fundamental governing equations. The kinematics is based on the conservation of momentum equation, which can be solved either for quasi-static or dynamic conditions (a quasi-static procedure was used for these analyses).
