Protein gel electrophoresis technical handbook

Electrophoresis is one of the widely used techniques in molecular biochemistry, microbiology, biomedical research. It is a type of protein separation method which relies on protein sizes to segregate the mixture.. It is one of the highly effective techniques of analysis and sole method for separation of proteins for western blot, RNA studies, etc.

Urine protein electrophoresis is analogous to serum protein electrophoresis and is used to detect monoclonal proteins in the urine. Ideally, it should be performed on a 24-hr urine sample (concentrated 50–100 times).

Gel electrophoresis of proteins - an overview

Electrophoresis is a standard laboratory technique by which charged molecules are transported through a solvent by an electrical field. Both proteins and nucleic acids may be separated by electrophoresis, which is a simple, rapid, and sensitive analytical tool.

Protein electrophoresis is a method for analysing the proteins in a fluid or an extract. The electrophoresis may be performed with a small volume of sample in a number of alternative ways with or without a supporting medium: SDS polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis (in short: gel electrophoresis, PAGE, or SDS-electrophoresis), free-flow electrophoresis, electrofocusing, isotachopheresis ...

Gel electrophoresis of proteins - Wikipedia

Immuno-electrophoresis is a general name for a number of biochemical methods for separation and characterization of proteins based on electrophoresis and reaction with antibodies. All variants of immuno-electrophoresis require immunoglobulins, also known as antibodies, reacting with the proteins to be separated or characterized.
